

Taking care of your family and yourself

A better way to prepare for potential long-term care expenses and other needs

As you plan for the future, your first instinct may be to concentrate on your family and their needs. Will your spouse or children be able to continue living the life you want for them if something should happen to you? How can you make sure you're not a burden to your family as you age?

Are you a caregiver?

- If you provide some type of long-term care to your parents or others, you're not alone: 60% of caregivers are women.¹

Will you need care?

It's possible, simply because women live longer.

- More than 70% of nursing home residents are women.³
- Over 75% of those at assisted living communities are women.³
- Almost two-thirds of home care recipients are women.³

As women, we often put others' needs before our own, caring for both parents and children. But in planning for your own future, you can look out for your family, too. With the right financial product, you can:

- Pass wealth to your family to help them financially when you're no longer around.
- Pay for potential long-term care expenses simply and quickly — no receipts needed.
- Generate potential additional supplemental income for retirement if you need it.²

So how can you get all these benefits in one place?
